There are many options for visits to Ohio theaters and I am happy to provide advice. I and some of the staff, Karen Cook or Frank Whitfield could attend some of those meetings. If and when appropriate. The theaters I would suggest include:

The Great Lakes Theater – Hanna Theater Restoration project in downtown Cleveland

The Hanna is across the street and part of the larger Playhouse Square renovation in Cleveland which is well known as serving as an anchor for the downtown revitalization.

Further to the west in Cleveland is the Cleveland Public Theater which is closer in size to the Sampson Theater <http://www.cptonline.org/>

The Nord Family Foundation provided a nice grant to CPT to promote local playwrights and provide them a venue for public performance

CPT is part of a larger project called the Gordon Square Arts District which concentrates performance space in a west-side neighborhood and includes several other theater venues in varying stages of renovation all of which would be easy for us to get you tours. <http://www.gordonsquare.org/>

The other site that would probably be of interest is the restoration of the Apollo Theater in Oberlin. <http://new.oberlin.edu/apollo/> This theater was independently owned for many many years. The theater was about to shut down permanently, but the College opted to purchase it and make it available to the community for movie venues but also a youth outreach and cinema studies program that links beautifully with the local public schools. The college also houses its cinema studies program there. I think there could be lessons learned here if Sampson every linked with Keuka College.

If you had time, 20 minutes north of Oberlin is the city of Lorain which restored the magnificent Palace Theater <http://lorainpalace.com/restoration/> Unfortunately, they have had their challenges recently, but it is a very interesting case study for the Sampson Committee

Finally, further west of Lorain by about a half hour is the City of Sandusky Ohio which restored its downtown theater and turned it into a very exciting venue which has spurred on local downtown development. <http://www.sanduskystate.com/>

That could keep you busy for a day or two. Let us know how we can help.
